

Laurogolf

Nestled in an environment of special nature, Lauro Golf Resort is born, which currently has 27 holes, combinable from nine to nine, all par 72. From the beginning the design of the complex is based on respect for the environment and nature that we surrounds, not only safeguarding the life of each and every one of the pre-existing centennial oaks, but also with the planting of thousands of young trees, mostly indigenous to Andalusia.

In Lauro Golf, nature overflows . Throughout the complex the contact with it is constant, whether playing golf, living in the residential or simply enjoying a walk through the surroundings, we can verify that we are not the only visitors to Lauro Golf. Rabbits, ducks, partridges, herons and even eagles will accompany us for much of the journey, as they have decided to be our neighbours, benefiting from the micro-climate created by the large amount of grove and the fourteen lakes of the golf course.

The field was designed by the late Folco Nardi to make it technical, which is not difficult. A good concentration and the right choice of the club to play with will lead us to present a good card in any of the nearly fifty golf competitions that take place every year in Lauro. The expansion of holes 19 to 27, designed by Mariano Benítez, has followed this same field trend that requires concentration and skill, completing the entire course. The field can be played on foot due to its moderately flat character, although there are two holes located in the foothills that give us an exceptional view over the Guadalhorce valley and the Mediterranean.

The clubhouse is located in an old Andalusian building, Cortijo el Paredón , which has an excellent restaurant, dressing room, shop and office service. In addition, swimming pool, paddle school, horse riding and bowling club nearby. But the best thing about the farmhouse is its fabulous patio, in the shadow of a huge centenary ficus, where the player can relax after a good game of golf.
